

GENDER 101

THE NEW HAVEN PRIDE CENTER

Community Agreements:

B.E.A.R.S

- Boundaries - presenters and participants are free to set boundaries around question about their own experiences
- Experience - this is a space where people have an opportunity to learn from the lived experience of trans people on how to best support us. We can have the best possible discussion if we talk about best practices from the vantage point of how to best implement them, not whether the support we advise is necessary.
- Agency - this is a space that centers the agency of trans youth and we will be having a discussion from that perspective
- Respect - this is a space for learning, please show respect for your fellow learners and correct gently
- Stack - please post questions in the comments and we have an open discussion so they can be answered

Confidentiality: Information shared by learners in this space does not leave this space.

Let's Start with the basics.

Let's define the word GENDER, together.

Gender Identity

- One's own understanding of their gender or lack thereof. Examples of gender identities: genderqueer, intergender, female, demigirl, male, agender, transmasculine, transfeminine, cis, nonbinary, genderfluid, bigender, Two-Spirit, etc., etc., etc.

PRESENTATION

- how a person looks - clothes, hair, accessories, body language, behavior, etc., etc.
 - Presentation \neq gender. More about this later

Someone is

Transgender:

gender does not match what you were assigned at birth

Cisgender:

gender matches what you were assigned at birth

Clearing some things up. What we see \neq who someone is.

- The assumption that sex equals gender is millenia old but if you look at the history of the trans community, as well as the existence of intersex people throughout history this myth starts to shed its authority
- Even though sex is real gender as we take part in it consciously is a social construct bolstered by pink toy ails vs. blue one's for boys (which is extra ironic when you remember blue used to be the color for 'girls' in Napoleans time and pink for 'boys')
- Gender roles are as varied as you can imagine but that doesn't mean that as a construct they DON'T MATTER. Gender is real and meaningful but incredibly more complicated than we generally think

Grounding Ourselves

Bodies are incredibly varied in every way including gender

Many people incorrectly assume a person's gender based on what sex they were assigned at birth. But that assignment is based on flawed assumptions too!

SEX CHARACTERISTICS

- Depending on the combination that someone is born with a doctor assigns a certain sex which is then assumed to be that person's gender even though these are
